National Film Awards : Celebrating Excellence in Indian Cinema

Mithun Chakraborty honored with Dadasaheb Phalke Award

“Our films reflect the artistic sense of our society. Life is changing. The standards of art are changing. New aspirations are arising. New problems are emerging. New awareness is rising. Amidst all these changes, the unchanging values of love, compassion, and service are still making our individual and collective lives meaningful. We can see all these values portrayed in the films awarded today.”

~ President of India

8 October 2024

Introduction

Cinema has always played a crucial role in shaping society, reflecting its values, and inspiring change. Over time, films and filmmaking have become more advanced. This remarkable journey of Indian cinema began in 1913 when the father of Indian cinema, Dadasaheb Phalke, created the first indigenous film, Raja Harishchandra. His passion and unwavering dedication to filmmaking paved the way for future generations, inspiring countless storytellers to push boundaries and elevate Indian cinema. To honor this legacy and encourage the creation of high-quality storytelling, the Ministry of Information and Broadcasting confers the prestigious National Film Awards along with cinema's highest honor, the Dadasaheb Phalke Award each year. The 70th National Film Awards were conferred on 8 October 2024 by Hon. President Draupadi Murmu.

Objectives

The Awards aim at encouraging the production of films of aesthetic & technical excellence and social relevance contributing to the understanding and appreciation of cultures of different regions of the country in cinematic form, thereby also promoting unity and integrity of the nation. The awards also aim at encouraging the study and appreciation of cinema as an art form and dissemination of information and critical appreciation of this art form through publication of books, articles, reviews etc.

History

The National Film Awards (NFA) were established in 1954 to promote cinematic excellence in India.

- In the first edition of the National Film Awards, the awards were given for the films of the year 1953. The awards were initially called 'State Awards' and two President's Gold Medals, two certificates of merit, and 12 silver medals for regional films were presented in the earlier years.¹
- The 1st National Film Awards (State Awards) were held over two days, during which exhibitions were held and two documentaries were premiered, along with the presentation of awards. The State Awards were initially instituted to encourage the production of films of a high aesthetic and technical standard with educational and cultural value. The Film Enquiry Committee (established in 1949), which recommended the institution of the State Awards, also suggested that Regional Awards for feature films should be given in the following years. The Regional Best Award was given to the National Best Film for the first six years. The number of awards has increased over the years. The first Best Actor and Best Actress awards were given to Uttam Kumar and Nargis, respectively, in 1968. This was after the awards for artists and technicians were separately established for the films of 1967. The Best Actress award was initially called 'Urvashi' and the Best Actor award was called 'Bharat'. To commemorate the release of the first Indian Feature Film, Raja Harishchandra on 3rd May 1913, it was decided to confer the National Film Awards on 3rd May of every year.

- Over the years, the awards have seen different award categories and nomenclatures. Several technical crafts have also been added to the award categories. Gradually, the number of awards has been increasing.
- Every year, after seeking entries for the NFA for the previous year, the Ministry constitutes juries for Feature Film, Non Feature Film and Best Writing in Cinema sections separately, comprising of people distinguished in the field of cinema, allied forms of art and humanities. Since the 57th National Film Awards, the awards in the feature film section are decided through a two-tier selection process. The entries are shortlisted by five regional panels and then winners of the awards are decided by a national panel. The Non-Feature Film section and the Best Writing on Cinema has juries specific to the award. The selection for the Dadasaheb Phalke award is based on their commendations of a committee of eminent film personalities, specially constituted for the purpose. No entries are invited for this award.
- The organization of film festivals was the mandate of the Directorate of Films Festivals, which was transferred to National Film Development Corporation (NFDC) in March 2022.
